

Ushuaia is the southernmost town in America. It's at the lowest tip of Argentina, just a short flight from the South Pole. Some cruise ships stop there, but not much to see or do, except for an occasional visit by a gang of penguins. In their black and white formal wear, all they want to do is whoop it up on a Saturday night.