

The Los Angeles International Airport has had enough of the crowded street traffic and blockage when passengers arrive at the pavements outside exit doors. LAX moved passenger pick-up to a new area, called LAX-it, near Terminal 1.

Passengers now must walk about 15 minutes to the new area, and shuttle buses also will board them from at all terminals. So, next time your flight lands at LAX and you need to hail a ride, be patient and follow the rules. While it may be inconvenient and confusing for awhile, soon you may actually get home a bit quicker.