

New rules went into effect at airports around the world that make the already bothersome pre-boarding procedures even more infuriating. Because passengers will be hit with a string of new questions, they're asked to show up at least an hour before flight time.

If they're carrying aboard their flights any electronic devices, they'll be more closely examined and may require detailed explanations. All of the new requirements will cause more delays in a process that is already overwhelmed with passenger frustrations. So, senior flyers, be prepared.