

Of course, the new ship is never intended to make it to the ocean, because the building site is more than 700 miles away from the nearest water. It will serve as some kind of amusement park in Chengdu, Sichuan Province. That's 850 miles from Hong Kong and 940 from Beijing. The finished project is expected to welcome its first visitors in about a year.

With this kind of tragic historic remembrance, would there be plans elsewhere to do similar disaster reproductions? There's already a replica of Noah's Ark in Kentucky. How about Napoleon's Retreat From Moscow, Custer's Last Stand, the L.A. Dodgers in the 2017 World Series and Hillary's Presidential Campaign? For more info, go to www.cnn.com/travel/article/china-titanic-sichuan