

According to The London Sun, American Airlines is earning more than $500 million a year by reducing the size of on-board toilets, thus adding more seats in the already-jammed passenger compartments. As if sitting for hours squeezed into the tiny cheap seats isn't uncomfortable enough. What's next: straps hanging from the aircraft ceiling, so that the lowest-class passengers will have to stand throughout flights?