

I know I'm supposed to register Millie as an official emotional support dog. For the past five years, she's gone everywhere with me as a daily helper. Now we're both invited on a sea cruise next month with my church group. We have to fly to the seaport, and I'm worried the airline will not let Millie on the flight with me. What should I do? PPK, Branson MO

A: Because lately there have been too many air passengers who fake all kinds of animals with them as legit companions, airlines are getting more strict. You'll be able to take Millie, but make it legal. First, check with your doctor to get written proof of your needing help. Also there are all kinds of internet info on how to legally register Millie, including: www.theguardian.com/lifeandstyle/2019/aug/12/fake-emotional-support-animals-service-dogs
