

Many senior travelers complain about how some of the world's most beautiful attractions are now over-run by clueless people and their kids. Whether it's Hollywood Boulevard, the Eiffel Tower or Philly's Independence Square, today's annoying scene is the same.

Instead of enjoying the historical sights, they stroll aimlessly with eyes and ears glued to those little electronic boxes. They bump into each other and anyone else trying to walk and enjoy the views. Even more obnoxious is when they raise their selfie sticks. Not only is your body in danger from the mindless people bumps, but your face and eyes become targets. Advice: When in popular tourist spots, always be aware and wary of the poking stick.
