

In your worldwide restaurant wanderings, you'll encounter many different menus. Some may delight, while others offend. Realize that people eat different menu items than yours, and they won't welcome your criticism.

The French enjoy horse meat. Russians chomp on whale steaks. Italians love baby calamari octopus. In China, Korea, Vietnam and other Asian nations, they eat relatives of our beloved Fluffy and Fido. Unless you're willing to join in on the pet feast, don't make a big fuss about it. Just look for an eatery that serves your favorite, snails on the half shell.
